Angara pushes guardians to discourage violence at home

¶1 The Department of Higher Education (DepEd) Secretary Juan Edgardo "Sonny"

Angara ^{has} urged parents and guardians ~~angels~~ to take an active role in ~~discouraging~~ ^{discouraging} school violence by closely monitoring their children and maintaining regular communication with school authorities, saying learner protection must begin at home and extend beyond the classroom.

¶2 Hindi natin kayang solusyunan ang karahasan sa mga paaralan kung sa loob lang ng classroom tayo kumikilos. Ang tahanan ang ating unang depensa (We cannot ^d address violence in schools if we act only inside the classroom. The home is our first line of defense)," he said in a statement released on Monday, Aug. 31.

¶3 The DepEd chief encouraged families to talk to their children daily, listen to their concerns, and coordinate with teachers and school officials.

¶4 Let us talk to our children every day, listen to what they are going through, and coordinate with their teachers and schools. We must learn to recognize red flags and changes in a child's behavior before these lead to violence or bullying. Let us make them feel that they are not alone," she said.

¶5 To strengthen parents' participation in learner protection, DepEd said it is expanding its Kaagapay Program under DepEd Memorandum No. 002, series of 2026, and integrating it with the Parent Effectiveness Service (PES) Program under Republic Act No. 11908.

¶6 The agency says the Kaagapay Program provides parent communities with practical tools through capacity-building sessions intended to help them identify warning signs, manage behavioral concerns, and coordinate directly with school Child Protection Committees and guidance personnel.

¶7 However, DepEd said it is working with the Department of Social Welfare and Development (DSWD) to harmonize the PES modules with the Kaagapay Program. (#)
